40 WORTH STREET

The neo-classical building at 40 Worth Street, also known as the Merchants Square Building, was built in 1929 by the architectural firm of Jardine, Hill & Murdock. Situated in upscale Tribeca in Manhattan, the building totals nearly 800,000 square feet, and occupies a full block from Worth Street to Thomas Street between West Broadway & Church Street. The main entrance on Worth Street offers tenants access to the public arcade; the arcade, accessed otherwise via a separate entrance on Church Street. With large, efficient floorplates and oversized windows throughout, the building proffers abundant natural light and exceptional city views, catering to small, medium and large tenants alike.

Building tenants include an array of major non-profits including the Acumen Fund, the Legal Aid Society and the Innocence Project. It is also the East Coast Headquarters for the iconic fashion brand, The Gap.

The surrounding neighborhood offers an array of both casual and upscale dining. Access to the 1, 2 and 3 trains is just a few blocks away, with further subway lines also easily accessible on foot.

TRIBECA

The Triangle Below Canal Street, Tribeca, is now famous across the globe as the home of the Tribeca Film Festival as well as being also one of the oldest neighborhoods in the city. Signs of its history can be seen in the old brick buildings that coexist with ultra-modern towers, an aspect which is particularly noticeable by the Hudson waterfront.

With art galleries, boutique shops, bars and restaurants – and as a magnet for celebrities and celebrity chefs alike – there is no shortage of fine dining experiences to serve the luxury residences and commercial tenants to be found in the area.

Iconic destinations include The Odeon and Bubby's, which sit alongside neighborhood favorites like Scalini Fedeli with its beautiful vaulted ceiling and Atera with its inventive countertop tasting menu. The lunch crowd can indulge in delicious cakes at Café Clementine or a morning espresso at Gotan on Franklin Street, and on Wednesdays sample the local Greenmarket, which is also a regular Saturday fixture.

Tribeca's 40 Worth Street is home to the East Coast headquarters of GAP, Inc, with Citigroup's global headquarters situated nearby on Greenwich Street.

Subway transportation is provided by the 1, 2, 3, A, C, and E lines, with the N, Q, R, W and 4, 5, 6 a quick walk away to the north east.
