33 IRVING PLACE

33 IRVING PLACE

Formerly the Crown Building, and now known as the Mercantile Building, 33 Irving Place (also known as 120 East 16th Street) is a pre-war full-service Art Deco office building with a prime location between East 15th and East 16th Streets, situated along charming Irving Place.

33 Irving Place was built in 1909 by the architectural firm Goldwin Starrett & Van Vleck, the same firm that designed the acclaimed Saks Fifth Avenue building. It was converted in 1987 and the building has 12 floors, 6 passenger elevators and 1 freight elevator, and boasts a tastefully renovated lobby. It is located steps from numerous parks, including Gramercy Park, Stuyvesant Square and the bustling Union Square Park. In 2017, the building was awarded an Energy Star label for its operating efficiency.

Bordering Union Square, Irving Place is a coveted location near the growing center of NYC tech. While tech companies are sprinkled throughout the area, the neighborhood also provides easy access to a myriad of restaurants, shops and mass transit options.

UNION SQUARE

Dominated by Union Square Park which occupies over seven acres, the district runs from the square's base at 14th Street, a block beyond its northern edge to 18th Street and a block west and east to Fifth Avenue and Irving Place respectively.

Surrounding the square are numerous buildings that evoke its rich history, many dating back to the 19th century. Fine examples include the Romanesque Lincoln Building at 1 Union Square West and the narrow Decker Building at 33 Union Square West with its Italian and Islamic influences – and where Warhol once had his Factory.

Packing retail, dining, commercial and residential space together, this is one part of New York that really rarely sleeps. The year-round farmers' market runs from 8am to 6pm four days per week, with tens of thousands coming to browse and buy fresh produce and flowers through the day. The square is a continuous hive of activity and is a major meeting point for people. Shoppers come to a variety of stores including Forever 21, Sephora and New York's largest Barnes & Noble, set over 4 stories in a landmark building on the north side.

The area offers many destinations for food and drink. The iconic Coffee Shop located at 27 Union Square West serves diner classics to a cool crowd from morning till late night, while Blue Water Grill offers premium seafood in impressive surroundings.

Major tenants in the area include Facebook's second NYC campus, Dropbox, Hulu, Mashable and Compass. The area is expecting a wave of new tech firms with approval now granted to create the ambitious Union Square Tech Training Center on 14th Street.

14th Street-Union Square Station is a major hub with access to the N,Q,R,W,4,5,6 and L trains.
